Course Description and Target Audience

Sexuality is an innate aspect of humans across the lifespan. As a result, therapists frequently encounter a variety of sexuality issues in the clients they treat, but may not feel well-equipped to address sexual concerns effectively. This 6-hour introductory workshop will address a wide range of sexuality issues that arise in children, adolescents, adults, and older adults, as well as effective strategies and interventions for treating sexual issues across the lifespan. Risks include some potential for discomfort while discussing sexual matters.

The target audience is mental health providers (advanced doctoral level psychology trainees, psychologists in practice, master's level clinicians etc).

Learning Objectives

- Identify five signs that distinguish normative from problematic sexual behavior in children.
- Identify three ways clinicians can assist parents in communicating with their children and adolescents about sexuality.
- Name three biological, psychological, and social factors that contribute to sexual concerns during pregnancy and postpartum.
- Identify three ways to work with couples in long-term relationships for the purpose of increasing desire.
- Identify three myths about sexuality in older adults.
